

Internship at Naisg

University of Toronto, Beth Chang

Internship period: February~July 2011

After graduating from University of Toronto, I came to Japan to explore Japanese culture and took Japanese language courses at Keio University. Most of my classmates only had the experience of studying but not working in Tokyo, so I considered myself very lucky to have this wonderful internship opportunity. Naisg attaches importance to employee learning which provides more learning opportunities than other companies, and this is definitely a great quality to nurture the growth of interests.

Although my Japanese was not fluent, there were still many interesting work including appreciation process, indesign editing, language translation, bookstore research, information exchange, contract reviewing, and communicating with foreign supplier...etc. I was able to receive these precious experiences from Naisg.

Not only the working environment was open and flexible, but also the people in Naisg were extremely friendly and helpful. There are many things that I was not familiar when first entering the company, but people would patiently answer my questions and spend much time teaching me many things. Most importantly, I had the opportunity to join the staff meetings in order to understand and learn about other people's work and perspective. Especially we have to change our seat randomly twice everyday to achieve the goal of paperless working environment and continuously learn from different neighbours.

In addition to the fantastic working environment, Naisg's mission is to change the world's communication; thus, enhancing communication skills is crucial here, especially there are many opportunities for presentations. People sometimes can become very nervous including me; however, the communication skill you learn from Naisg will very useful throughout your entire life. Particularly most of companies in modern society are looking for people who have strong communication skills, and Naisg is definitely a great place to sharpen these skills. Therefore, I really recommend Naisg's internship program for those who do not have much work experience but would like to gain a variety of practical experiences. Welcome and enjoy your work at Naisg!
